Recent work by James Adovasio and Andy Hemmings has focused on examining the inundated land surface in the Northeast corner of the Gulf of Mexico that was exposed between Clovis times and the Last Glacial Maximum of roughly 22,000 years ago. Andy's talk will include discussion of their 2008 findings and the direction of future research this summer.

Andy received his bachelors degree from the University of Arizona and then worked as an archaeologist for the Navajo Nation out of Window Rock, AZ before heading east and underwater. Graduate work turned into a masters and PhD from the Great Gator Nation at the University of Florida. Currently he works with Mike Collins on the Gault Project at the Texas Archeological Research Laboratory, University of Texas.

The Llano Uplift Archeological Society was organized by people interested in the protection, conservation and study of historic and pre-historic materials and sites in the Llano Uplift ("Central Mineral Region") area of the Texas Hill Country. Its primary goals include education of the membership, students and the public; and to support other groups, researchers and educators with similar interests. Stewardship of the Nightengale Archaeological Center is a major responsibility of LUAS.
